Introduction

HTML

HTML allows you to create various elements such as headings, paragraphs, lists, links, images, tables, forms, and more. It also supports attributes within tags, which provide additional information or modify the behavior of elements. Attributes can specify properties like color, size, alignment, and more. With HTML, you can create a hierarchy of elements, indicating relationships between different parts of the content. For example, you can use the tag to create sections or containers for grouping related elements together

CSS

1. CSS specificity: When multiple CSS rules target the same element, the browser uses a specificity algorithm to determine which rule to apply. Generally, more specific rules will override less specific ones.

2. CSS units: CSS provides a range of units for specifying lengths, including pixels (px), ems (em), and percentages (%). It also includes units for colors, such as RGB and HEX codes.

3. CSS box model: The CSS box model describes how HTML elements are laid out on a web page. It consists of four layers: the content layer, padding layer, border layer, and margin layer.

4. CSS frameworks: There are several popular CSS frameworks available, 11 Page such as Bootstrap and Foundation, that provide pre-built CSS styles and components that can be used to quickly create responsive and attractive web pages.

4. CSS frameworks: There are several popular CSS frameworks available, 11 Page such as Bootstrap and Foundation, that provide pre-built CSS styles and components that can be used to quickly create responsive and attractive web pages.

JAVASCRIPT

JavaScript is a widely used programming language that allows developers to create interactive and dynamic elements on websites. It is primarily executed by web browsers, enabling enhanced functionality and interactivity for web pages. JavaScript is a versatile language that can perform a range of tasks, from simple operations like validating forms and manipulating webpage content to more complex operations such as building web applications and creating interactive games. It adds interactivity by responding to user actions and events, such as clicking a button, hovering over an element, or submitting a form.
